TORCH: “Big Enough to Help . . . Small Enough to Care”

Facing up to Our Real Wellness Challenge

Jay Seifert, LoneStart Wellness

Recent figures show that chronic diseases such as diabetes, heart disease and cancer, are responsible for seven out of 10 deaths and 75 percent of the $2.2 trillion spent on health care in the United States each year. More than 130 million Americans today have a chronic disease, many of which could either be effectively prevented or minimized by making better nutritional choices, becoming more physically active and smoking cessation.

The health consequences of overweight, obesity and physical inactivity present challenges to all individuals and organizations by increasing overall health care costs and by making health coverage less affordable. This is particularly evident when we calculate the impact of obesity on the direct and indirect costs of mostly preventable and expensive to treat chronic conditions.

While health care reform is high on the Obama administration agenda, and we hear a lot about ways to make coverage fair and affordable, if we don't first tackle the true cost driver in the health care system, chronic disease, we won't get very far in reducing health care costs.

The good news is that we find most of us will make modest-but-meaningful changes in our vital wellness behaviors that can significantly reduce our risk for preventable chronic disease—so long as we believe we have a realistic expectation of success.

During the 2009 TORCH Annual Conference, Dave Pearson, President / CEO, issued a call for your organizations to compete in the 2009 TORCH / LoneStart Wellness Challenge. Call us at 512-894-3440, or email us at information@lonestartnow.com to find out how we can all begin to address and alleviate what chronic disease is costing each of us and our respective organizations.

100% LEED AP Officers at Rees Associates, Inc.

Continuing its ongoing commitment to leadership in sustainable design, Rees Associates, Inc. (REEST™), an internationally recognized architecture, planning, and interior design firm, is proud to announce that 100% of its officers are now LEED Accredited Professionals (LEED AP).

Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) is a program established by the United States Green Building Council to encourage and recognize sustainability in the design and construction industry. The LEED AP designation is bestowed upon individuals in the industry who have demonstrated a mastery of sustainable design principles, methods, and implementation.

REES has employed sustainable design strategies since the firm was founded thirty-four years ago in Oklahoma City. Now an international firm with six offices in the Western Hemisphere, REES' commitment to "green" design was underscored by a challenge issued from President and CEO Dr. Frank Rees in 2008 to the firm's Vice Presidents.

Meeting that challenge, all Vice Presidents and the President of REES are now LEED Accredited. These officers include: Frank W. Rees, Jr., C. Leroy James, Ken Baker, Ralph Blackman, Jan Blackmon, Beverly Brandon, Melanie Compton, Rob W. Genter, Jerome W. Hovorka, Farooq Karim, Stephen Lawson, Kyle Lombardo, Ronald J. Luman, Kathy Potts, Jay Tullis, and William H. Yost.

"Beginning with a television station REES designed for Gene Autry that heated itself at 5 degrees Fahrenheit in 1980 with waste heat off the transmitter, our firm has been committed to green and sustainable design. I am very proud that REES is the only major architecture firm in the U.S. where all Vice President's as well as the Chief Executive Officer are LEED Accredited," said Dr. Frank Rees, AIA, LEED AP, President and Chief Executive Officer of REES.
